

1 interference with contract; tortious interference with business expectancy; trademark
2 counterfeiting under the Arizona Consumer Fraud Act; and a request for declaratory 3 judgment as to all claims.

4 Then, as explained by the Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit, “[f]rom this point, 5 the case became a maze of counterclaims, stipulated dismissals, and new complaints. This 6 procedural morass was made all the more complicated when some of Volkswagen and Audi’s 7 complaints migrated from the original counterclaim to a separate complaint that was later 8 consolidated with the original action.” Au-Tomotive Gold, Inc. V. Volkswagen of America, 9 Inc., 457 F.3d 1062, 1066 (9th Cir. 2006), cert. denied, 127 S.Ct. 1839 (2007).

10 In its opinion, filed August 11, 2006, the Ninth Circuit reversed the district court’s 11 denial of summary judgment, finding in favor of VW and Audi on the issue of infringement 12 under 15 U.S.C. § 1115(b) and remanded “for consideration of the ‘first sale’ defense and 13 any other related claims or defenses.” Id.

14 This case was reassigned to the undersigned on November 13, 2006.

15 Before the Court for consideration is the Motion for Summary Judgment of 16 Defendants/Counterclaimants Volkswagen and Audi, filed May 21, 2007, seeking a 17 permanent judgment as a matter of law on VW and Audi’s claims of trademark infringement 18 under the Lanham Act.

19 A hearing was held in this matter on October 22, 2007 and the matter was taken under 20 advisement.

21 II.

22 In their motion for summary judgment, Defendants assert that the only liability issue
23 remaining, on which the Ninth Circuit remanded this case, is whether Auto Gold can assert 24 a “first sale” defense. Defendants argue that under the Ninth Circuit’s opinion, which 25 conclusively determined that the products at issue are likely to confuse customers, and thus, 26 VW and Audi have established a prima facie case with respect to infringement in violation 27 of the Lanham Act, that the material facts are undisputed and Defendants are entitled to 28 judgment on the question of the viability of Auto Gold’s first sale defense.

1 Defendants cite Sebastian International, Inc. v. Longs Drug Stores Corp, 53 F.3d
2 1073 , 1076 (9th Cir. 1995), explaining that a trademark holder has no right to object when 3 a third party displays and resells genuine merchandise under the producers' trademark.
4 Defendants use the example that "once a genuine Volkswagen brake caliper is sold to a 5 customer, the customer may resell that caliper and VW has no right to object" under the first 6 sale doctrine. To illustrate the exception to the first sale defense, Defendants use the 7 example, that if the purchaser of the Volkswagen brake caliper uses the caliper to build its 8 own anti-lock brake system, it can no longer be sold under the VW brand because it is not 9 a genuine VW brake system, and thus, a recognized limitation to the first sale defense is that 10 the mere sale of a trademarked product does not give the purchaser the right to alter the 11 product and resell it as if it were genuine. See Karl Storz Endoscopy v. Surgical 12 Technologies, Inc., 285 F.3d 848, 856 (9th Cir. 2002); Rolex Watch, U.S.A., Inc. V. Michel
13 Co., 179 F.3d 704, 710 (9th Cir. 1999).

14 Defendants first argue that Auto Gold has asserted its first sale defense to only one 15 of its products, the "VW" medallion license plates, and that it should be noted that Auto Gold 16 has no defense whatsoever for the rest of its counterfeit key chains, license plates, and license
17 plate frames, for which the Ninth Circuit's conclusive finding of prima facie infringement
18 stands entirely un rebutted, and therefore, VW and Audi are entitled to judgment as a matter 19 of law. See Au-Tomotive Gold, 457 F.3d at 1074-78.

20 Defendants next argue that it is undisputed that Auto Gold uses the VW medallions 21 in manufacturing an entirely new product by using its own materials and its own 22 specification, in some instances simply by gold-plating the medallions.

23 Defendants further argue that the VW medallion license plates are not protected under 24 the first sale doctrine, an important - but limited - restriction on trademark rights because 25 Auto Gold "has done much more than 'merely stocking and reselling' genuine VW® 26 medallions." See Sebastian, 53 F.3d at 1076. Defendants provide a thorough analysis of the 27 Ninth Circuit decisions addressing the restrictions of the first sale doctrine in cases where the 28 reseller uses genuine trademarked items as a component in the manufacturing of a new

1 product in Rolex Watch, Karl Stroz, and Westinghouse v. Electric Corp v. General Circuit
2 Breaker & Electric Supply, Inc. 106 F.3d 894, 900 (9th Cir. 1997).¹

3 Defendants also argue that they are entitled to a permanent injunction as a matter of 4 law, and that “irreparable injury may be presumed’ from a showing of a likelihood of 5 confusion in a trademark case. GoTo.Com, Inc. V. Wal Disney Co., 202 F.3d 1199, 1205 n.
6 4 (9th Cir. 2000)(citation omitted).

7 In conclusion, Defendants assert that the Court should grant judgment as a matter of 8 law and enjoin Auto Gold from any further sale of its products bearing the VW and Audi 9 Trademark and direct the parties to proceed with discovery on the remaining issues as to 10 damages and restitution.

11 In response, Auto Gold, setting forth a factual and procedural history, focuses on the 12 fact that it “immediately stopped manufacturing any products displaying VW trademarks or 13 logos and refused to fill any new orders for such products ...” and that “[s]hortly thereafter, 14 Au-Tomotive Gold placed on its website, where it remains today, notification of its cessation 15 of the manufacture and sale of such products.”²

16 Auto Gold focuses on the packaging material, specifically that “[t]he cardboard
17 backing indicated in places that Au-Tomotive Gold, Tucson, Arizona, was the manufacturer 18 of the product, identified www.autogold.com as its website, and stated in two places that the 19 plates are ‘Made in the U.S.A.’”³ To show that there is no evidence of actual confusion, 20 Auto Gold further asserts that “[t]he cardboard backing also directed the ultimate customer 21 to ‘see the label on the part or packaging for details’ as to whether the product is authorized 22 by the vehicle manufacturer,” and that such directions were affixed to the back of each 23 license plate and frame described.

1 Auto Gold cites the decision of the Ninth Circuit's order of reversal and remand, that 2 no evidence of actual confusion has been presented.

3 Auto Gold argues that it's use of logos that VW released into the marketplace was 4 protected by the first sale doctrine, first enunciated in Prestonettes, Inc. v. Coty, 264 U.S. 359 5 (1924), and that under this doctrine, resale by the first purchaser of the original article under 6 the producer's trademark is generally neither trademark infringement nor unfair competition.
7 Enesco Corporation v. Price/Costco Inc., 146 F.3d 1083, 1084 (9th Cir. 1995). Auto Gold 8 cites a number of district court decisions to support its argument that there is no infringement 9 based on disclosures to avoid deception and confusion⁴ and rely on BMW of North America, 10 Inc. v. AuTomotive Gold, 1996 WL 1609124 (D.D.Fla.). Auto Gold argues that Rolex and 11 the cases relied upon by the Defendants are inopposite or raise a "distinction without a 12 difference" under the first sale doctrine.⁵

13 Auto Gold contends that "[t]he branch of the Doctrine addressed here generally 14 involves a fundamentally different product incorporating a trademarked component," and 15 "[t]hus, the dispositive factor is 'whether end users of the product are likely to be misled as 16 to the party responsible for the composition of the product.' See Karl Storz Endoscopy-Am., 17 Inc. v. Surgical Techs., Inc., 285 F. 3d 848, 857 (9th Cir. 2002.)"⁶ Auto Gold argues that this 18 standard applies even in cases where quality differences may actually exist. See Enesco
19 Corporation, 146 F. 3d at 1087.

20 Auto Gold concludes that the effectiveness of its disclosures under the first sale 21 doctrine raise a genuine issue for trial.

22 Auto Gold also raises a cursory statute of limitations argument and a laches defense, 23 and concludes that injunctive relief is inappropriate at this juncture because genuine issues

27 ⁶Id, page 10.

1 for trial on questions of whether Auto Gold's incorporation of genuine VW logos into its 2 products is acceptable under the Lanham Act.

3 Defendants argue that Auto Gold's statute of limitations and laches defenses fail, 4 because VW's claims were timely brought within the Arizona three-year statute applicable 5 to claims sounding in fraud and that Auto Gold has not suffered cognizable prejudice to 6 support a laches defense.

7 III.

8 In remanding this case for further consideration, the appellate court summarized that, 9 although VW and Audi did not present evidence of actual confusion, neither had Auto Gold 10 presented evidence that the disclaimers had any effect. "At best, the confusion factor is in 11 equipoise." 457 F.3d at 1078.

12 Following the court's analysis in Sleekcraft, finding that the key facts in this case were 13 undisputed, the Ninth Circuit found that VW and Audi "established a prima facie 'exclusive 14 right to use the ... mark in commerce.'" 457 F.3d at 1078 (citing 15 U.S.C. § 1115(b)).

15 The Ninth Circuit employs an eight-factor test (the "Sleekcraft" factors) 16 to determine the likelihood of confusion: (1) strength of the mark(s); (2) 17 relatedness of the goods; (3) similarity of the marks; (4) evidence of actual 18 confusion; (5) marketing channels; (6) degree of consumer care; (7) 19 defendant's intent; (8) likelihood of expansion. Surfvivor Media, Inc. v.
20 Survivor Productions, 406 F.3d 625, 631 (9th Cir. 2005); see also AMF Inc. v.
Sleekcraft Boats, 599 F.2d 341, 348-49 (9th Cir. 1979).⁷ These elements are not applied mechanically; courts may examine some or all of the factors, depending on their relevance and importance. See Surfvivor, 406 F.3d at 631.

21 457 F.3d at 1076.

22 As reasoned by the Defendants, although Auto Gold, or any person or entity, can 23 acquire a genuine registered trademark emblem, the "lawful acquisition of the emblem does 24 not give them the right to attach it to a new item of manufacture that is not licensed by VW" 25 ... and if Auto-Gold's "defense were accepted – blatant trademark infringers would be 26 empowered to circumvent the Lanham Act by selling a broad range of counterfeit accessories

27
28 ⁷Abrogated in part on other grounds by Mattel, Inc. V. Walking Mountain Productions, 353
F.3d 792 (9th Cir. 2003).

1 from wheels to radiators bearing a brand-name certificate of authenticity but lacking any 2 genuine connection to the trademark holder.” Defendants further suggest such would create 3 “a gaping loophole in the trademark afforded under the Lanham Act” which is foreclosed
4 under Ninth Circuit case law which clearly rejects the first sale defense proffered by Auto 5 Gold.

6 Auto Gold correctly states that the Ninth Circuit found “no evidence of confusion,” 7 but does not elaborate that the court noted that “[s]horn of their disclaimer-covered 8 packaging, Auto Gold’s products display no indication visible to the general public that the 9 items are not associated with Audi or Volkswagen. The disclaimers do nothing to dispel 10 post-purchase confusion.” Id. at 1077-78.

11 The panel explained that “[t]he law in the Ninth Circuit is clear that ‘post-purchase 12 confusion,’ i.e., confusion on the part of someone other than the purchaser who, for example, 13 simply sees the item after it has been purchased, can establish the required likelihood of 14 confusion under the Lanham Act.” Id. at 1077 (quoting Karl Storz, 285 F.3d at 854). Thus, 15 the issue this Court must review on remand is narrowed to whether, “the strength of VW and 16 Audi’s marks, Auto Gold’s intentional and exact copying of the marks, and the direct 17 competition for a specific and limited consumer group, all weigh heavily in favor of a 18 likelihood of confusion.” 457 F.3d at 1078.

19 The Court finds that Auto Gold does not adequately address the issue of post-purchase 20 confusion, but rather attempts to distinguish the facts in this case, which are undisputed.

21 Upon review of all matters submitted, the Court finds that Auto Gold has failed to 22 state facts to sustain a first sale defense or substantiate any other defense, including statute 23 of limitations or laches. Based on the foregoing,

24 IT IS HEREBY ORDERED that the Motion for Summary Judgment of 25 Defendants/Counterclaimants Volkswagen and Audi is GRANTED; Accordingly,

26 IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that Plaintiff/Counterdefendant Au-Tomotive Gold, Inc.
27 is permanently enjoined from any further sale of its products bearing the VW and Audi 28 trademarks;

1 IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that the parties shall file a Joint Status Report, in regard 2 to proceeding with discovery on issues pertaining to damages and restitution, on or before 3 May 1, 2008.
